As if the industry was not sly enough, Big Tobacco is breaching unparalleled levels of trickery through its current marketing gambit; pedaling a product to impressionable teenagers that has caused millions of deaths worldwide, contributed to global warming, and polluted our stomping grounds with billions of cigarette butts, the world's most common form of litter. According to the Federal Trade Commission, tobacco companies spend 10.5 billion a year on marketing, insuring not only that habits remains intact, but also that new and impressionable people convert to their products, including teenagers. Perhaps the most frustrating aspect of Big Tobacco marketing to teenagers, is the fact that youth-focused health education is limited, and at its very best appears to delay the onset of youths' engagement in traditional smoking. An electronic cigarette (e-cig or e-cigarette), personal vaporizer (PV) or electronic nicotine delivery system (ENDS) is a battery-powered vaporizer which has the feel of tobacco smoking. They produce a mist rather than cigarette smoke. In general a heating element vaporizes a liquid solution known as e-liquid. E-liquids are usually a mixture of propylene glycol, glycerin, flavorings, and with or without nicotine.

E-Cigarettes Take Off After Tobacco Price Hike

The e-cigarette boom has hit South Korea. Prompted by a near-doubling of tobacco prices —part of an effort to tackle South Korea’s high smoking rate—electronic cigarettes have become a hit among local smokers. E-cigarette shops have popped up on many street corners and several major TV home-shopping channels have started selling the devices. According to the data from the Korea Customs Service, imports of e-cigarette products jumped nearly seven-fold to 5.22 billion won, $4.76 million, during September-November compared with

E-cigarettes popular despite health questions

Youths also have taken to vaping, a term that's sometimes used to describe the inhaling and exhaling of e-cigarette vapor. A national study released by the University of Michigan in December found that teens are now using e-cigarettes more than regular cigarettes. And the CDC reported in August that more than a quarter of a million youths who'd never smoked a cigarette used electronic cigarettes in 2013; the number more than tripled from 79,000 in 2011 to more than 263,000 in 2013.

Electronic cigarettes can help smokers quit or reduce the amount they smoke by as much as half, according to research that appears to undermine fears that vaping will encourage non-smokers to take up the habit. A review by the Cochrane Collaboration, More...

#E-cigarette technology may make them harder to regulate...

Just a few years ago, early adopters of e-cigarettes got their fix by clumsily screwing together a small battery and a plastic cartridge containing cotton soaked with nicotine. Now, the battery-powered contraptions have computer chips to regulate puffs and temperature, track usage, talk to other electronic devices and even blink when "vapers" are near each other. Federal officials say the technology More...

E-cigarettes could save hundreds of millions of lives, scientists tell WHO...

Health authorities continue to view e-cigarettes as a threat, but experts cite potential for harm reduction. More than 50 public health experts and nicotine experts, including five Canadians, are urging the World Health Organization not to classify e-cigarettes as tobacco products, because they say doing so could jeopardize a "significant health innovation” that could save hundreds of millions of lives. In an open letter to WHO Director General Margaret Chan, the scientists from Europe, North America, Asia and Australia argue e-cigarettes are More...
